

Quotes on Creativity, Process and Your Art

Norman Zhao

“The comfort zone is a great enemy to creativity.” -Dan Stevens

The reason I chose this quote is because I feel like this is where I am most of the time and is the reason I am often in a slump. Because I rather play games in my spare time rather than work on improving my art skills, my art skills stay constant rather than improving.

I have no special talent. I am only passionately curious. –Albert Einstein

Art is not something I started out because I wanted to make art. It started because I was put in an art class in high school and I would laugh with my friends about how bad my art was and over time that changed to I want to see where this can lead me.

Solitude is creativity's best friend, and solitude is refreshment for our souls. – Naomi Judd

I think that this is something I want to explore more because being with others makes me want to play around more than anything so if I was left alone, would I feel more inclined to improve? Or would I just play around just as much or even more? The reason I chose this quote is because I think it could be what I need as some people work better in certain environments and I think this may be the one I need to put myself in.

My Art

This is an illustration of one of my friends that I did for one of my friends and it's something I did for fun and is one of my first digital works. The reason I chose this is because digital art was new to me and at the time I was majorless and was looking for something to get into and this is the work that got me to like making digital art because of how much fun I had while making it.
